The complete control of both these divisions of the public power and authority has been transferred from one political party to another, and this transference of authority has been made in the hope and firm reliance of the people who ordained and wrought the change that great benefit would inure to the whole Commonwealth from the new order of things. To realize this aspiration of the sovereign people should, apart from all partisan motives, attract and gratify the highest ambition of which we are capable, and stimulate us to the furthest effort of human exertion. The duties and obligations with which we are charged are this year more than ordinarily important and onerous. The new legislation which is required to give effect to the labors of the Constitutional Convention is of essential importance. The closest care will be demanded that no hasty, incomplete or ill-advised measures be enacted, otherwise the work and purpose of the Con-vention may be embarrassed and possi-bly nullified for a year. Indeed, the work of framing and perfecting the laws made necessary by the amendments to the Constitution is likely to prove so exact-ing, laborious and comprehensive that I regard it as my duty to recommend the most prompt action, so that by the end of 'our session the purposes of the peo-ple will have been fully accomplished and wrought out through your energetic

(Special to The Evening World.)
BURLINGTON, N. J., Jan. 2.—Mrs.
Sarah A. Knox, widow of the late Capt. Sarah A. Knox, widow of the late Capt. Henry T. Knox, has lost her mind. She has been regarded as eccentric, and did many questionable acts since the death of her husband She lived the life of a hermitess in filth and squalor, and it was not until a few evenings ago that the alarming nature of her condition, was discovered. She appeared on the street with broom in hand and attempted to sweep away fancied devils, upon which the 'magery of her mind dwelt. Officers were called to take care of her, and found her house, a handsome brick structure on Penn street, in filthy condition.

They reported the case to the Board of Health, and to-day the place is being cleaned.

Capt. Knox was a pensioner of the British Government. He was intelligent and had means. His eccentric wife had a passion for dogs. She had a pack of shout fifty, and invariably for them at the dining cable and from her plats.

The man was a veteran of the war and received a pension of $12.50 a month. To add to their support, they sang together in the back yards on the east side of the city. The man played the flute and the woman sang little French songs. Every morning before the couple started out, they went to mars at St. Joseph's church.

It was last Saturday afternoon when the people in the house first smelled the escaping gas. Then the housekeeper, Mrs. Saristena, went to the owner of the house, John Ready, and asked him to see that the leak was repaired. He told her to mind her own business. Evidently he did not pay any attention to the first floor, fainted twice, and had to go to sleep that night in empty rooms on the first floor, fainted twice, and had to go to sleep that night in empty rooms in the first floor left the building.
